"The Editor of Livy should possess several qualifications which are not often united in one man. He should have learning, but he should have judgment also. He should be acquainted with all the ancient authorities, but he must not repose confidence in their statements unless they are borne out by the less questionable evidence of language, custom, or law. He must be a good scholar, but he must also be a good historian. All these qualifications Professor Seeley appears to possess in a very unusual degree."—Athenæum.
